

“DJ’s This Is Our Time To Shine!”

Lisa Barry / Lisa Barry Media
Lisa@lisabarrymedia.com

We’ve had crises before. We came, we conquered, we moved on. But this one, COVID-19, has a much longer life-span than any other the others. Not necessarily worse but unprecedented and ongoing!

If you’re like me, you’ve exercised that “hope” muscle so many times it’s getting a charlie horse. That first week, your breaks were spot-on with a nice balance between hope and proactive measures. But now, three weeks into it and you’re running out of energy, adjectives, quotes and camera angles and feel like a hamster in the wheel that keeps spinning.

First, congratulations! This is new territory for all of us and you are killing it! All you need now is perhaps a fresh infusion of creativity and verbiage and ideas to work a few new muscles. Here are a few things that have been ruminating in my brain.

1. Find new words to use. I found a list of a few hundred positive words that I’ll include at the end of this so it doesn’t take up so much room here, but you might want to print it off, look it over and see if some of the words spark an idea for you. Highlight those and develop them into a break angle. At the very least, highlight encouraging words that you don’t use very often, and try to work them in for a little more color in your stories. Put them on a piece of paper in front of you as a reminder.
2. Challenge your listeners to sacrificial service. You know your listeners best so this may or may not be a good fit but in addition to finding ways to protect your family, and those most at risk, you might challenge them even further by talking about the way Christians have responded to epidemics over the last 2000 years. The Gospel spread by leaps and bounds because Christians were the only one who were willing to put themselves into harms way to serve the sick. Retelling some of the highlights of those historical stories could be very powerful...not to mention give you a whole new palette of colors to paint with.
3. Make sure you’re a member of the Facebook group: Christian Radio Show Prep. It’s curated by radio DJ’s who find content and then share with the rest of us. You’ll also find several audio cuts from our core artists that a few people have assembled to offer some fresh voices on air.

4. Ask your listeners to call in and share what truth they stand on when they're tempted to worry. Ask them to talk about how they're talking about this with their kids; what questions their kids are asking; what ways their kids want to help.
5. I'm really enjoying Bob Goff's devotional called "Live in Grace". Bob lives-out a servant mindset all the time and his stories are fresh, entertaining and memorable. I'm not suggesting reading any of them on-air, but merely using them to stir the creative juices, retell a story in your own words or perhaps lift out a phrase to share with the audience.
6. I resist reading anything on air so, when you want to share something from the Bible, look it up in a very conversational version like The Message, or New King James and without reading it, talk about the essence of why it's meaningful. Tell about why it struck you and where it puts salve on a wound. Say it like you'd tell a friend in the passenger seat of your car.
7. Lisa Williams offered these suggestions in a show prep webinar: "Be curious. Pay attention. If something makes you smile- go there! We need to delight in life, delight in Jesus, delight in our kids, delight in the fact our car works, delight in stuff...it's contagious."
8. Be on the hunt constantly for hero stories, amazing kid stories, and sacrifice stories.
9. Identify people not getting a paycheck, the generosity of strangers, ways to support small business, and where to donate food to foodshelves.
10. Don't be afraid to find levity because people really need to laugh. There will be funny stories of online learning, being in cramped spaces for long periods of time, trying to find things at the grocery store, and creative meals with limited ingredients.
11. There will be lots of great deals coming down the pike as retailers try to drum up business again. Listeners love to know what those are.
12. And finally, here's that list of 'positive words' to stir your thinking:
